

Treasure

- Discovering buried treasure is a popular theme in children's adventure stories. Adults fantasise about this too, if the sales of metal detectors are anything to go by! An equivalent dream for some, might be winning the lottery and never having to worry about money again.
- The UK government has recently redefined 'treasure,' so a treasure trove has to be more than 200 years old and have local or national significance. Previously treasure had to be made of precious metals, so some finds were sold to private collectors, rather than put on display in museums.
- How would you define treasure? What do you value? Think about the things that give you joy, or that give your life meaning. For some people it might be family, good health or freedom. Perhaps you value something else? What would you be prepared to give up in return for your 'treasure'?

'The greatest treasures are those invisible to the eye, but found by the heart.'
